Improvement seems to be the preminent feature in all parts of the town. And not among the least of the improvements now going on are latter, by the efficient aid of many of our citizens is to have a good finish on the inside .-Tis is very desirable. The society is large in this place, and abundantly able to make their place of worship comfortable and attracting. The Presbyterian society, we are pleased to say, have set a very good example in this respect. We are no advocates of extravagance or profit gacy in the building or finishing of any neceswary structure, yet we are unable by any system of reasoning, to arrive at the conclusion that a house of public worship should be any less attracting than any other place of common resort. the contrary, taste and skill are not only necessary in the construction-but comfort and convenience should be consulted in the arrangement, so that the time passed in church may be to be a profit to all. And while upon this subject we cannot forbear expressing our disapproation of the system of separating the sexes as soon as within the walls of the church, as if it were criminal to sit, stand, or kneel together piness here, as well as hereafter. As to convenience, it is only necessary to look on while the mass that frequently attends the church. are coming out, and see the crowding, hesita tilly, or learnying for familian or friends to get together-or experience the fatigue of holding a child during a long service when you might otherwise have been relieved by your husbandor wife, a portion of the time-or witness the running of children from one side of the house to the other to get with a parent, to the great annoyance of the speaker, to satisfy any one that comtort, good order, and convenience, all require that families should sit together in church. It may be argued that the discipline forbids, and that respect for its author requires us to obey his directions(?) So far as his instructions were in accordance with the express reverence them on account of their origin, and him for their observance. Beyond that, no system of reasoning by analogy, or contrast, could require us to put up with an inconvenience or oppression because a good man had requested abor under serious local disabilities whereas our constitution guarantees to us the most sa. you?"--Ex. ered of all rights-the liberty of conscience .-Besides, many of the original provisions of the discipline are totally disregarded, and obsolete: then why stick to this which is decidedly an
